"Don't be left bemused, read the H.Town Daily News!"

PUSHING FORWARD

"Things are moving along rather smoothly now that I can do things without someone always messing it up!" These were the words of Featherbottom curator, Hildegard Kreienheder, when asked how operations were going after Charles' tragic death.

How about...
NO!

When asked what the future holds for the Featherbottom Museum, Kreienheder mentioned her name would look great on the side of the building. Oh, Snap!

New director, Avila Pintar, could not be found for comment. Museum historian, Opal Blum, commented that she has yet to see the woman since Charles' death but often can be found at the Auden Museum.

Someone's
Salty!

Ms. Camila Marie Featherbottom did not wish to be interviewed due to being too deep in mourning. However, she did want readers to know the museum is still open and encourages visitors to make a donation in honor of Charles. Checks can be made out to Camila directly.

REMEMBERING CHARLES MONROE FEATHERBOTTOM

As many of you know, the "alright" museum director, Charles Monroe Featherbottom died earlier this month. He took the expression: what goes up, must come down a little too serious.

Some of you may be shook to see me doing a feature in the newspaper for him, but with all the buzz around town, I thought I'd set the record straight... In the words of Shaggy, "It wasn't me."
